Vintage FPS games in VR is a genre-bending, exciting collection of games set in the dark and fun worlds of the early '80s, and featuring epic levels loaded with high-tech weapons. Heading back into the maelstrom of mega boss battles and somersaults of death through the air, through the ground and around corners, up stairs and down fire escapes, heroes and humans, elites and weirdos, all vying for the last laugh. SINGLE-PLAYER CAMPAIGN: Take on the role of Sam, a hard-as-nails FPS protagonist who goes all-in to avenge his dead family and re-establish humanity's dominance over the Wasteland and Mental's henchmen. Do you have what it takes to survive and lead the revolt against Mental's rule in South America, across a deadly medieval Europe, or even past the gates of hell? STORY: A mysterious powerbeast called Mental is holding the world hostage with his machinations and his legion of minions. A mysterious device called Samir, his mad scientist of a brother, wants to harness Sam's psychic powers and use them for his own sinister ends. The only ones who can stop him are Sam's disarming widow Elizabeth, her teenage daughter Violet, and Sam's best friend and former squad mate Jared. Forced to head into the Wasteland to save the world, they will learn about the history of Mental and his brother Sam, and it's up to you to decide how it all pans out. FINAL VERDICT: A new, high tech, polygonal VR shooter. There are tons of levels to jump into (and out of) in all sorts of moods and styles. The concept works well and they keep coming - where's the endgame? Early RRP's like £35-40 might seem like overkill, but £50-60 is a lot easier to swallow. If you like old-school shooters, FPS, Vintage games then this is right up your street! Norway's capital moves to 100% renewables energy - kqr2 ===== guelo I don't understand why some countries are prioritizing clean energy ahead of clean water, food, and fresh air. It makes about as much sense as growing green grass. There are many ways to reduce the costs of production

| Roseanne Rees is the author of Mud, and A Domestic Cleaner Turns to Murder. The summer of 2002 was shaping up to be not so hot. The economy hadn't crashed yet, but it was far enough along to feel like a boulder on your back. The president was convicted of perjury and obstruction of justice, a terrible black eye for a once-popular Republican with a brand-new Democratic White House, a vice-president who had spent the previous eight years making fun of Al Gore, and a policy agenda that seemed every inch of the worst. I was a working woman and a homeschooler and out of work. I went broke the month before I wrote my first novel. I was living with friends for about six months, financially flatlining, and working as a part-time secretary. An old neighbor came over and offered a job. I took it. It paid well and allowed me to write at night while the kids did their homework. In the mid-1990s, I traveled the country talking about prostitution. These were some of the most interesting meetings and conversations I ever had. On the substance side, it was often a make or break moment for someone: "My prostitution case depends on what you say about prostitution." I understand this now, but back then I didn't because I was just a young woman with five children: sex work was virtually taboo to me. So I brought my children along with me. I had never before been introduced to the hard-core drug trade. I hadn't known when I lived in New York as a young adult that drug clients pay mobs to assault their drug buyers. I didn't know how money gets passed at bus stops. I didn't know how much money starts and ends a "date." I didn't know about prostitution, always a taboo topic in religious communities. I'd been a reluctant feminist; I avoided talking about pornography. Now, I was in the room with perpetrators of the worst crimes and I felt unprepared and ill-equipped to understand. I had to figure out how to parent this chaos under my roof. There was no way in hell that one of these kids was going to school. "Nothing breaks a member of a herd more swiftly than the coming of a stranger." We took her to school, which we did ourselves, all four of them. We taught
