MUMBAI (Reuters) - India's slow economic growth has raised fears that the ruling Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) could be in line for a shock defeat in an election next month, as an outgoing government is being swept away by a wave of anti-incumbency. Prime Minister Narendra Modi's party is forecast to get the largest number of seats, a poll published on Monday by two prominent think tanks showed, but its prospects may improve if it holds rallies across the country. “The Modi government’s biggest problem is anti-incumbency. The BJP will have to look at different ways to reach out to voters,” said Himanshu Mandal, a member of the Fabian Society think tank. These concerns have dogged India’s economy, which has decelerated over the past few quarters and is expected to grow at its slowest pace in five years, government data has shown. India is electing a new national government in parliament on April 30, the same day leaders from Pakistan, China and the United States are scheduled to meet in a regional summit in the Pakistani city of Islamabad.
