(Playable/Creative) This game is really one of a kind. It is a new concept for RPGs. It is a very beautiful game that offers a lot of replayability. Every time I play it I find something new. The only complaint I have is that the magicka costs too high. This game deserves 5/5. - Newsea on the Playable/Creative Summit (Playable/Creative) I'm also a fan of the Elden Ring, and I think that players of the Elden Ring will enjoy this game. I like it as well. It's not a simple game with only battle mechanics, it's a heart-stopping game with interesting stories to be told and with rich worldbuilding. This game is excellent and shows that NISA has what it takes to compete with the big Japanese publishers. I give the Elden Ring RPG a 9/10. - Katia Scholze on the RPS Review of Elden Ring (Computable/Creative) I think of it as a new kind of action RPG, and I enjoy the story-telling of it. I think Elden Ring: Tarnished Souls is a fantastic RPG that is worth your time and money. I'd give it an 8/10. - Chibigami on the Playable/Creative Summit (Playable/Creative) Playable/Creative' games are good. One of them is The Elder Scrolls V: Skyrim, and I like that game a lot. I think that this game is a good game, but we need to wait for the complete version, but right now, it is a good game. - Shane Bettenhausen on the RPS Review of Elden Ring: Tarnished Souls (Playable/Creative) Playable/Creative' games are good. One of them is The Elder Scrolls V: Skyrim, and I like that game a lot. I think that this game is a good game, but we need to wait for the complete version, but right now, it is a good game. (Computable/Creative) I like the game overall, and I find it fun. I have played many RPGs, and I think that this is a fun RPG. It has a lot of strategy and it has plenty of the RPG elements, like a leveling system. - Ari Hoffman on the Playable/Creative Summit (Computable/Creative bff6bb2d33

They had realized that the self depended, not on the domineering will of another, but on one's own strength, will, knowledge and acceptance of one's own life. For, in the Masnovy World, death was abolished. There was no concept of what it was; life as we know it was. What is death, when one desires freedom and no limits? In the face of no limits, there lies no possibility of death. It was a dream, set free.

The Masnovy World, a culture of rebellion, beauty, art, martial strength, academics, family and love. But I've got a slightly better solution and that's to point a light source at the side of the library, like shown above. Because of the all-encompassing flat wall behind it, the resulting light pattern depends very little on the size and properties of the source, so it's very easy to adjust. You don't need a decent amount of light, 3-4 CRI is usually enough. Naturally, this works just fine if there is a pretty bright window behind the books and you want to maximize the amount of light getting in to a room, but it's supposed to be ok even if the window behind the books doesn't provide enough light. The light source also doesn't need to be really bright, in fact it should be nearly impossible to read books in front of it. If you have too strong background light, the solution is obviously not to use the light, but just cover the front of the books. A video showing the effect: Edit: after doing some research I found out that it is actually harder than I anticipated to get really white light out of LEDs. Nowadays they all have a few more colors compared to traditional white incandescents, this is from a thing I read a couple years ago. The reason is because the human eye has a considerably good C

Q: How to bind texture to quad? I have created a GameObject and have marked it as a Plane Instance and have bound it to the Mesh Renderer. I have linked its material to a texture. I have also linked its Collider to a script that I am using to detect when the plane intersects with something. Now I have the problem that the plane is invisible(i know because it is translucent) and is not facing the right direction. I have also set its rotation to being 0,0,0 and that is not the problem because it is facing the right way. The problem is that I have set a texture on the plane's Quad and when I click in the scene I just see a grey(translucent) plane(on the screen) that is not facing the right direction and is not visible to the player. I have tested adding the same Quad to a GameObject without the texture and the Plane behaves as it is supposed to. How can I get the Quad with the texture to behave as it is supposed to? A: Use the SphereRenderer to render the game object as a sphere create a new material on the GameObject. Then, in this material, use the Texture. Set the type to Diffuse. Switch to the SphereRenderer component Under the Renderer Properties, set the Position from Pivot to worldSpace and the Rotation from Center to worldSpace. If you use translation or rotation values, the Renderer will rotate the object as well. In the RendererSettings, set the cull mode as Culling. If you use planes, a plane will be culled from the SphereRenderer when it is over the plane. NOTE - This means you will have the same GameObject with the same material applied to a GameObject. The same material will be applied to both GameObjects. It is not a duplicate. If you want to have a different material for the plane, then create a material for the plane that references a texture on the plane. You can use this material for both GameObjects in your
