Opening Times: They don't know the area, says. Fuzu, King's Park, Telford. If you can watch the DVD rip of this movie and not watch it, then...Q: When does AWS Lambda run? I have a nodejs + mongodb code on AWS Lambda and I'm wondering when the code runs. When my code writes something to mongodb, when does it run the code? Do I have a 10min interval where the code runs? Does this code run every time the request comes?

Any help is appreciated. A: Lambda functions are executed either when they are invoked, triggered, or by specifying a cron trigger. If you use the @handler function tag and specify a handler function, then the Lambda will execute the function automatically when invoked. If you use the handler payload option, then the handler function will be called when the event is detected. You can configure how often a function is invoked by using the Invoke by Timestamp option. If you use the cron expression option, then the Lambda will be invoked at scheduled times, and you can schedule functions to execute immediately. There are two types of cron expressions: basic This type of expression does not take a date or time. interval This type of expression does take a date or time. For a basic expression (no timestamp), you simply add an interval to the current UTC time. For example, UTC time is now 8:00am (8:00am AM) in the morning, so the basic time would be 8:00am-8:00am:00 AM. If you specified that a function was to be invoked every 5 minutes, the Lambda would get the last invocation at 8:00am and invoke your function at 8:05am, then at 8:10am, 8:15am, and so on, every 5 minutes. A time based expression has the following format: { [D] [M] [H] [m] [s] } [ { [Y] [m] [d] } ] UTCTime You can also use a combined expression with a basic expression. For example: { every 1m, on: "cron(0 0 * * * ? *)", arguments:... } That expression specifies the following
