Association of HIV infection with anemia among Mexican and Guatemalan children. HIV infection has been associated with chronic blood loss and anemia in industrialized countries, but its effect on hematologic indicators in developing countries has not been well investigated. We sought to determine the incidence of anemia among HIV-infected children from two developing countries, Mexico and Guatemala. Study participants were 737 HIV-infected children aged 6 months to 6 years who were enrolled in a combined efficacy and safety trial conducted from 1991 through 1998. Baseline hemoglobin, hematocrit, mean cell volume, mean cell hemoglobin, red cell distribution width, mean cell hemoglobin concentration, and serum iron, ferritin, zinc protoporphyrin, and vitamin B-12 levels were measured. Anemia was defined using values from the World Health Organization age- and gender-specific reference standards. Serum was also tested for Cryptococcus antigens. Age-adjusted hemoglobin levels were lower among HIV-infected children than among HIV-uninfected children, but the difference was significant only for children 6 months to 1 year old. Hematocrit levels were lower among HIV-infected children than among HIV-uninfected children, and this difference was significant only for children > or = 2 years old. Anemia was more frequent among HIV-infected children than among HIV-uninfected children, but the difference was significant only for children 6 months to 1 year old. The associations between HIV infection and anemia were greater for Guatemalan than for Mexican children. The frequency of anemia was not significantly increased among children with asymptomatic HIV infection. Neither the presence of Cryptococcus antigens in blood nor low levels of serum zinc protoporphyrin were associated with HIV infection. HIV-infected

April 9, 2013 - News Release Belmar Primary School graduate Christopher Corchado, 21, was shot and killed early this morning as he walked to a subway station in the Bronx. The motive for the shooting has not been determined. The senseless act of violence took place at St. Mary's Park just before 12:30 a.m. April 8, 2013. Mr. Corchado died at the scene. He was a local baseball player and had played in his high school's spring baseball tournament. In addition to playing baseball, Corchado was also enrolled in a charter school and an alternative school in the area, both of which he was attending full time as a high school student. Those close to Mr. Corchado have said that he had recently started working at a restaurant as a dishwasher. They have also said that he was attending the same vocational school that he had previously attended. At this time, a source in the NYPD has reported that there may be some connection between the victim and the assailant. The gunman is described as a Hispanic man, about 30 years old and approximately 5' 7". The man was standing near the subway station entrance when he fired upon Corchado. He fled the scene on foot. The Manhattan US Attorney's office has been called in to aid the investigation.

Based on the ongoing investigation, the detectives have closed the case as a homicide. However, one official has said that it is "way premature to label this as a senseless act of violence," and that there has been no indication of a connection to drugs or gangs. The name of the victim was released today. The family of the victim is requesting privacy and has asked that any proceeds from a fund be used for the benefit of his parents, siblings and in-laws. The US Attorney's office has assigned Detectives Richard Cawley and Raymond D'Eon to the case.
