[Skin manifestation and peripheral blood picture in patients with primary Sjögren's syndrome]. Sjögren's syndrome is regarded as an autoimmune disease with secondary dysfunction of the lacrimal and salivary glands. However, it has been known that there is a part of patients who have no evident functional disturbance of the lacrimal and salivary glands. In this study the peripheral blood picture and skin manifestations of patients with Sjögren's syndrome were investigated. The test values of the peripheral blood picture were as follows: ESR, 42.1 +/- 10.3 (before the administration of corticosteroids); WBC, 5,320 +/- 2,730 (4,800-7,800); Hb, 12.4 +/- 2.0 (10.5-14.9); Plt, 26.5 +/- 15.1 (10.0-35.0); pH, 7.40 +/- 0.03 (7.32-7.46); pCO₂, 32.9 +/- 6.8 (26.0-39.0); pO₂, 40.4 +/- 11.7 (28.0-54.0); GOT, 48.4 +/- 32.3 (7.2-63.1); GPT, 63.4 +/- 52.4 (10.0-91.0); GTP, 58.2 +/- 33.3 (17.0-65.0); LDH, 682.3 +/- 697.7 (400.0-1,000.0); T-Bil, 0.57 +/- 0.31 (0.30-1.60); BUN, 18.5 +/- 5.1 (10.0-27.0); Cre, 0.62 +/- 0.21 (0.27-0.83); UA, 7.7 +/- 5.2 (2.2-29.2); NH₃, 30.8 +/- 8.5 (16.0-36.0). Nothing can be taken for granted in the realm of automation. What works in the short term may not work in the long term. This is even more true of artificial intelligence. Many people imagine that robots will do all the work in the future, but that is only a possibility if they are able to provide the information they will need. How does artificial intelligence work? Artificial intelligence is based on scientific principles. It involves computations. These are carried out through algorithms that enable computers to mimic a range of human behaviors such as solving problems, recognizing objects, finding patterns, and providing assistance. How can artificial intelligence help us? Artificial intelligence can help us in a number of ways. It can perform routine processes that humans cannot. Computers are efficient, and save time for us. They give us high-quality output at a far lower cost. For example, airlines use computers to recognize patterns and save fuel. Also, virtual assistants are available for business to help run their operations. These are called chatbots. They can be used to coordinate projects, expand sales, and respond to customer queries. What are the risks of artificial intelligence? As with any technology, there are risks associated with artificial intelligence. For instance, so-called 'killer robots' or 'killer drones' could eventually come to exist. These are not as far off as some people think. People are concerned about the misuse of artificial intelligence, as it will be used by people who are not qualified or trustworthy. The risk from artificial intelligence is not limited to robots or drones. It can apply to any other technology that uses artificial intelligence. The risk is also increased when artificial intelligence becomes so advanced that it has autonomy. It then becomes an independent entity. It can make decisions on its own, and make some decisions at the expense of human life. An example of this is the recent debate on the termination of human lives. This took place recently in the Netherlands, but if people had not been aware of it, it could happen elsewhere. How can artificial intelligence help in the healthcare sector? The medical sector employs a large number of people. It's highly labor intensive and can require a lot of time and expertise. This makes it very costly to keep up to date. This is because the development of new technologies can lead to expensive treatments and tests. Artificial intelligence will help in the medical sector in a number of ways. It can be used
